Editorial (Vol. 6, No. 5, December 2009)

The 3rd International Conference on Research Challenges in Information Science (RCIS) aimed at providing an international forum for scientists, researchers, engineers and developers from a wide range of information science areas to exchange ideas and approaches in this evolving field. While presenting research findings and state-of-art solutions, authors were especially invited to share experiences on new research challenges.

Quality papers in all information science areas were solicited and original papers exploring research challenges did receive especially careful interest from reviewers. Papers that had already been accepted or were currently under review for other conferences or journals were no to be considered for publications at RCIS'09.

This special issue of the International Journal of Computer Science & Applications, dedicated to Advanced Solutions for Information System Engineering, presents 7 extended versions of long papers that obtained the highest marks in the reviewing process. In the context of RCIS'09, they are linked to Information System modelling from requirements to databases and devices issues.
